Sustainable Finance

On 1 February 2024 FINMA published for consultation the draft Circular Nature-Related Financial Risks. Banking associations criticise the proposal which is more extensive than initially announced. They criticise double materiality which obliges banks to measure impact of their business activity on nature and biodiversity, without such frameworks of reference being available. They criticise focus on biodiversity for which no common standards have been defined. They criticise scope which includes financial flows, for example through transition plans, which goes beyond the mandate of FINMA's regulatory activity.
